Home(ing)

This work titled Home(ing) juxtaposes an image of original 1970 house plans of the artist's current residence with the literal and disembodied shadow of technology required to record these plans. The intimate knowledge of the house's construction, captured through a fleeting digital photograph, is contrasted with the overlaid Google Maps icon, the ubiquitous symbol of a technology which de-privatises the home and instead makes it part of a very public domain. The tension between the private sanctuary of the home, symbolised through detailed house plans and the public accessibility of the house through technology, is interrogated in this work.
