

Financial Disclosure Policy Changes for Japanese Non-Profit Organisations:
Bureaucratic Resistance to Change and Major Disasters

Teruyo Omura

University of Southern Queensland
Faculty of Business and Law
School of Accounting, Economics, Finance & Law
Springfield, Queensland, AUSTRALIA
Ph#: +61 07 3470 4536
Email: teruyo.omura@usq.edu.au

Financial Disclosure Policy Changes for Japanese Non-Profit Organisations:
Bureaucratic Resistance to Change and Major Disasters

Abstract

The 1995 Kobe earthquake changed Japanese government policy relating to the establishment of not-for-profit Corporation status for small volunteer groups and clubs. The Japanese Earthquake and Tsunami in 2011 caused even greater damage than the Kobe Earthquake. Again policy towards not-for-profit organizations appeared to change. These changes have been heralded as a significant shift in the Japanese bureaucracy's policies towards non-government organisations. However, since 1995 changes in financial disclosure requirements and capital requirements have been re-framed, implemented and re-interpreted, but their impacts show the changes are unlikely to be as significant as they appear.

Keywords: Disasters; Non-profit; Financial Disclosure, Japan.