

THE IMPORTANCE AND BENEFITS OF CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY DISCLOSURE IN THE LIBYAN CONTEXT: EVIDENCE FROM MANAGERS

Nagib Salem Bayoud, The University of Southern Queensland, Australia
Marie Kavanagh, The University of Southern Queensland, Australia

ABSTRACT

This explains the importance and benefits for Libyan companies of engaging in corporate social responsibility disclosure (CSR). The researchers have chosen the Libyan context as one of the world's developing countries and it has undergone many changes over a short period of time in terms of economic, environmental and social changes. Both quantitative and qualitative methods were used to collect data relating to CSR in Libyan companies. Perceptions of financial managers interviewed as part of the study reveal that CSR is important for company performance, not only in the developed countries but also in developing countries. This paper reveals that CSR in the annual reports is very important in terms of attaining company objectives to: satisfy the interests of stakeholders; protect employee's interests; clarify the extent of contribution of the company in both CSR activities and CSR; assist appropriate investment decisions. The perceived primary benefits of CSR were enhanced company reputation, and increased financial performance. It also improves ability to attract foreign investors, and results in a higher level of consumer satisfaction leading to commercial benefits. Secondary benefits include demonstration of compliance with regulation and improved employee commitment.

KEYWORDS: Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR); Corporate Social Responsibility Disclosure (CSR); Financial Performance; Corporate Reputation.

INTRODUCTION

The institutional context of the emerging economy of Libya has experienced dynamic change over the last ten years (Mateos 2005). The main influential factor that leads to and regulates the attitude and behaviour of Arab societies, including Libya, is the Islamic religion. According to Ali (1996) the Islamic religion organises the social life in family and other social organisations and maintain their endurance and influence. Changes in regulatory environment may have an impact on companies in terms of their disclosures, therefore the level of CSR disclosure has increased since 2000 in Libya compared to previous years (Pratten & Mashat 2009) due to pressures from stakeholders, which in turn may clarify the importance and the benefits of CSR in the Libyan companies.

This also may refer to develop the concept of CSR. The development of the concept of CSR has been passed in the different stages; the first stage is the period 1970-1980. Empirical studies were focus on developing methods to measure the incidence of information disclosure by firms which was voluntary. Most frequently were disclosed about employees and product activities. At that time, managers, accountants, and the majority of their observers were not interested in environmental concerns, because it was invisible. Some empirical studies were used three environmental categories out of twenty seven (Ernst and Ernst, 1978 as cited in Mathews 1997). The second stage is the period 1980-1990. Many changes have appeared due to the focus of the social and environmental accounting literature, with increasing signs of specialization since 1980. For instance, value-added statements attracted a separate group of adherents and employee reports (Burchell et al., 1985). Environmental disclosure has become of more concern than social disclosure, environmental disclosure and regulation consider an alternative means of reducing environmental damage. Legally enforceable accounting standards, Means of conceptual frameworks, and legislations are features of this period which contribute in the increase regulation of accounting disclosures. Empirical studies in this period were more analytical and less descriptive. The final stage is the period 1991-now. This stage has focussed on environmental issues within accounting on a broad front, including interest from managers as well as accountants. (Gray et al. 1995) argue that this stage has been characterized by the almost complete domination of environmental accounting with research on broader social reporting (including employee and ethical disclosures).

This research presents evidence from interviews with 24 financial managers and 7 information managers on the importance and the benefits of CSRD in Libya. The motivations for this research are that some companies consider CSR activities and its disclosure may bring a competitive advantage and External pressures consider catalyses other companies to engage in CSR activities and its disclosure (Branco & Rodrigues 2008). This research contributes to our knowledge about what the extent of the importance of disclosure of CSR activities information for stakeholders and what the potential benefits to the Libyan organisations that can be obtained from disseminating CSRD. There are few numbers of studies that focus on these questions in quantitative studies; however this research is the first study that depends on both quantitative and qualitative study to explain the importance and the benefits of CSRD in Libya. The research could obtain a deeper understanding on this subject than do prior articles based on interviews. Generally, this research expands the evidence that exists about both the importance and the benefits of CSRD. The majority of interviewees are that CSRD are considered as one of the most important reasons which help the Libyan companies to achieve their objectives, such as enhancing image and reputation; supporting financial performance; improving employee commitment, etc. These benefits gained CSRD the observed importance by different stakeholders. But few numbers of interviewees believe that CSRD is a minor element to improve the business performance in the Libyan context.

LITERATURE REVIEW

CSRD has found an increasing amount of attention in both the academic and business organizations. Such disclosure includes the provision of information on human resource aspects, products and services, involvement in community activities and environmental reporting. Gray et al. (1995) state that "... It is not restricted necessarily by reference to selected information recipients, and the information deemed to be CSR may, ultimately, embrace any subject ...". Many quarters have recognized this view of CSR as a broad concept. Cleaner environment and better society for instance is regarded CSR as a concept whereby companies decide voluntarily by The European Commission (2001). The World Business Council for Sustainable Development (WBCSD) (1998) defines CSR as "the continuing commitment by business to behave ethically and contribute to economic development while improving the quality of life of the workforce and their families as well as the local community and society at large" (Holme and Watts, 2000). Currently, making profits and element of CSR and accountability consider the main objective of business organizations in order to maintain corporate reputation and appropriate performance whereas in the previous years, the main objective of business organizations is making profits (Ghazali 2007).

A growth of nonfinancial reporting (disclosure) has relied on the evolution of the concept of CSR. This means, the company is responsible for its action. Indeed, stakeholders are asking companies to disclose their both social and environmental activities and their ability to improve the corporate process through nonfinancial reporting. In this regard, identifying, monitoring, and reporting all social, environmental, and economic effects of its operation on society at large are concrete evidence that companies are committed to continual, long-term improvement, if they want to gain their stakeholders' trust and build a good reputation in the market (Brammer & Pavelin 2004).

Responsibilities of company differ toward their stakeholders regards economic, legal, and social in order to improve its organisational performance in terms of financial performance, employee commitment, and corporate reputation. In addition, the strategy of Corporate social responsibility is important (policy, programme or process) when it yields substantial business- related benefits to the firm, in particular by supporting core business activities and thus contributing to the firm's effectiveness in accomplishing its mission (Burke & Logsdon 1996). The blending of these responsibilities into complete corporate policy without losing sight of any of its commitment is the main challenge for the company. Additionally, in the long-term, the commitment of the company toward its stakeholders often lead to improved organisational performance, in other words, the economic responsibility of company might conflict with its social responsibility in the short-term, at the same time, they can work together to improve the company's image. Thus, this does not mean that socially responsible of the company cannot be as profitable as others. Currently, the common concept of CSR involves to voluntarily disclose companies about social and environmental concerns in their operations and interaction with stakeholders. It includes some complex issues such as environmental protection, human resources management, health and safety at work, relations with local communities, and relations with suppliers and consumers. In addition, Friedman (2002) presented the most famous definition of CSR as the economic concept of market value maximization that has support from shareholders. He asserts that the profit demands of the owners or shareholders and the basic regulations of society are consistent with the responsibility of a company.

As evidence of adherence of companies to CSR and sustainable development concepts, currently, there is a growth in numbers of multinational corporations as well as small- and medium-sized companies claim their social and environmental reporting practices. In a similar vein, the right way towards an overall comprehension of what practitioners consider efficient and appropriate socially responsible behaviour is represented by reporting-based analyses (David 2005). A company should disclose both the positive and negative impacts of CSR due to its business operation on labour standard, the environment, economic development, and human rights by CSR reporting. Furthermore, as a result of a general growth of the overall number of companies producing CSR reporting, currently there is a growth and expansion of CSR reporting to include a broad focus on social, economic, and governance issues although reporting was focused almost entirely on occupational health and safety and environmental issues (O'Rourke 2004).

CSRD has several roles which are included: Assessing the impacts of CSR activities; Measuring the effectiveness of CSR programs; Reporting on CSR; and External and internal information systems allowing the comprehensive assessment of all corporate resources and sustainability impacts (Jenkins & Yakovleva 2006). Many scholars have been asserted (Gray 2001; Gray et al. 1997; Mathews 1997) that the CSR has identified a number of stages in CSR's development. The first stage is the period 1970-1980. Empirical studies focused on developing methods to measure the incidence of information disclosure by firms which was voluntary. Most frequently were disclosed about employees and product activities. At that time, managers, accountants, and the majority of their observers were not interested in environmental concerns, because it was invisible. Some empirical studies were used three environmental categories out of twenty seven (Ernst and Ernst, 1978 as cited in Mathews 1997).

The second stage is the period 1980-1990. Many changes have appeared due to the focus of the social and environmental accounting literature, with increasing signs of specialization since 1980. For instance, value-added statements attracted a separate group of adherents and employee reports (Burchell et al., 1985). Environmental disclosure has become of more concerned than social disclosure, environmental disclosure and regulation consider an alternative means of reducing environmental damage. Legally enforceable accounting standards, Means of conceptual frameworks, and legislations are features of this period which contribute to the increased regulation of accounting disclosures. Empirical studies in this period were more analytical and less descriptive. The final stage is the period 1991-now. This stage has focused on environmental issues within accounting on a broad front, including interest from managers as well as accountants. (Gray et al. 1995) argue that this stage has been characterized by the almost complete domination of environmental accounting with research on broader social reporting (including employee and ethical disclosures).

Two different types of motivations can lead companies in order to engage in CSR activities and disclosure. The first motivation is that some companies consider CSR activities and disclosure may bring a competitive advantage. For example, they think that having good relations with their stakeholders will obtain them a good financial performance, employee commitment, and corporate reputation by assisting in developing valuable intangible assets. External pressures (government, shareholders, consumers, etc.) consider the second motivation which catalyses other companies to engage in CSR activities and disclosure (Branco & Rodrigues 2008). These companies think that not doing CSR activities and disclosure will lead them to lose some their profitability, reputation and must be addressed to mitigate their effects. Social responsibility activities and disclosure constitute mainly a legitimacy instrument used by a company to demonstrate its adherence toward stakeholders in order to increase or maintain their financial performance, their image and their relationship with their stakeholders.

THE METHOD

This research method was used both quantitative and qualitative approach. The quantitative approach was employed the annual reports of the period of 2007 and 2009. The qualitative approach was to gather information from face to face of semi-structured interview (see Table 1). In general, the purpose of study is to investigate the perspective of financial managers and information managers of the firms in Libya about both the importance and benefits of CSRD. Data gathered from interviews was recorded by a note and tape recorders with financial managers and information managers of the firms enabled the researchers to gain the deeper insights on this issue in this research. The interviews took place between October 2010 and February 2011. Interviews lasted between twenty minutes to one hour and half. The meetings were held in the manager's office. As a result of the interview can explain issues in depth (Denzin & Lincoln 2000), it considers an appropriate technique for this research. Thus, it plays an important role in explanatory research. Interviews with one of the most important social and environmental stakeholder groups were conducted to help the researchers to gather data relevant to this issue. In addition, knowledge gathered from consulting with other researchers in CSRD and literature reviews enabled the researchers to design an interview guide with common questions in order to ask the interviewees.

Table 1: Profiles of interviewees

Sector Name	Financial Managers	Information Managers	Total
Manufacturing	8	4	12
Services	11	1	12
Banks and Insurance	4	2	6
Mining	1	0	1
Total	24	7	31
Participants rate	77%	23%	100%

THE FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

4.1 The Importance of CSR In order to obtain a deeper understanding of this phenomenon, the following question was initially asked to interviewees about what the extent of the importance of disclosure CSR activities in their annual reports for stakeholders. Interviewees were also asked their personal opinions about CSR. All interviewees confirmed that CSR activities and information play an important role toward their companies and society and the responsibility of their companies in society to achieve both social and economic benefits. The majority of interviewees emphasised that their companies attempt to achieve economic objectives through increasing profit, revenues and sales as well as social objectives. Two PhD theses provide the same findings for the responsibilities of the businesses toward society, and the roles of their business in society to be both social and economic are Momin (2006) and Aribi (2009). Aribi (2009) also mentioned that corporate policies for disclosing CSR information are determined very much by the profit objective, but not the only objective of these companies. In this regard, Abdulhamid et al.(2005) demonstrate that disclosure about social and environmental activities in the Libyan annual reports leads to some social and economic benefits which are reflected at the macro level. The interviews of this research believe that their companies should achieve both objectives, when their companies invest their money in any project. One of the information managers states that:

One of the most important goals in the Development Bank is to reject investment in projects that does not take into consideration the adverse impact of the project on the environment and hence this bank obligates the customer to get the agreement of the environmental management in order to obtain the requested loan.

One of the financial managers states that:

Management of the Company when investing in any project, it looks at the goals of economic and it does not disregard the benefits which will be obtained by this project to the community such as participation in addressing the problem of unemployment, employee training, etc., as the company is part of the community and should contribute in social activities for the development of society as a whole

All interviewees confirmed that the importance of CSR information in the annual reports is not less important than CSR activities; both of them can play a significant role to gain the company objectives. Abdulhamid et al. (2005) illustrate that information about CSR activities should reflect the interaction between the society and the management and should recognise the right of different stakeholders. The management also should inform all stakeholders about CSR information. They revealed that CSR information in the Libyan context is directed and limited to some interest from some stakeholders such as the General Assembly, the management (the company's Administration Board) and, the central Authorities (such as the security of Economy, the security of finance, the security of Industry, the Central Bank of Libya and the watchdogs bodies which include the Public Control Office and the Tax Office). However, all interviewees of this research believe that CSR information is one of the most important parts that clarify what the extent of committing their companies to contribute to CSR activities to most stakeholders. Some interviewees mentioned that CSR information are directed to some stakeholders such as employees, management, investors, customers, shareholders, government through annual reports (financial information, CSR information) to determine the following purposes: few employees use annual reports to help their companies to protect their interests. Shareholders use annual reports to know how to use their funds; Investors use annual reports to help them in making investment decisions; Management uses annual reports to evaluate the company and to address the problems and correct negative deviations in the company through appropriate making a decision, as shown in the following quotations by some financial managers:

The management in this company supports full disclosure for the transparency cause and we review all activities in the annual report, you can apply this to everything when it is related to social activities.

We are preparing the annual report in order to show the real situation of the company either financially or socially, as we know that there are many parties that benefit from using this information to assess the situation of the company and know what the company achieved and its evidences during the year.

On the other hand, Ahmad, N.S.M. (2004) found that the Libyan companies did not inform employees about CSR information due to a lack of importance of this information to their employees, while the remaining stakeholders are interested in social and environmental information. Some interviewees illustrated that while CSR information is important to management, investors and shareholders, there is a lack of ability to comprehend CSR information by employees that in turn, may lead to their disregarding information included in annual reports. This view is obviously stated in the next quotations by some financial managers:

I believe that the information about the activities of social responsibility affect the decisions of management and shareholders and investors... But unfortunately, many employees were not aware of the importance of social activities, only a few employees know the importance of social activities and disclosure of them and their effects on the company.

Some interviewees believe that some Libyan companies are still under privatized. This means that the government companies have limited stakeholders such as government, management, customers, employee and creditors. These stakeholders except for the government cannot affect the policy of the company as the Libyan government possess all shares in these companies, while non-government companies which are listed in the Libyan stock market have all stakeholders such as investors, shareholders, customers, creditors and so on that can influence the policy of disclosure. The following quotation was stated by some financial managers.

Ownership base on the bank has a negative impact on the importance of this information for stakeholders and the financial benefits expected to provide this information.

Abdulhamid et al.(2005) also revealed that stakeholders of the Private companies in the Libyan context see a main influence of the disclosure of CSR information on the environment, in particular manufacturing companies whilst the service companies may perceive little influence of CSR information on the environment. The importance of CSR information differs from one category to another. Most interviewees in banks and insurance sector as well as services sectors considered employee information and customer information in annual reports to be more important than others. In this regard with a simple difference, all interviewees in manufacturing and mining sectors confirmed the importance of employee information, environmental information and customers' information compared with community involvement information to all stakeholders excepting society. Some financial manager stated in the following quotation:

Service companies such as ours are interested in social activities and information about the employees, and information relating to customers, considering that this information helps the company's decision-making that in turns, is reflected in the improved financial performance for the company and hence these companies disclose this information more.

Another interviewee supported this view in the following quotation:

I believe that the industrial companies such as this company take into account the environmental impacts that may affect their workers and the community, particularly the places that surround it as, it cares about workers and the quality of the product because these activities and these information affect the performance of the organization.

This is general information about the importance of CSR and CSRD for the Libyan companies and the extent of the importance of CSR activities and information to achieve the company objectives. In summary, the main reasons of CSR activities and information are used to achieve the interests of stakeholders. CSR activities and information in annual reports explain the extent of the contribution of the company in CSR activities towards society to stakeholders; to assist the company in order to protect the employees' interests; to make investment decisions and to determine how the management use their funds; and to make appreciate decisions.

4.2 Benefits of CSRD A number of theories in the accounting literature have presented some justifications for disclosing CSR information in annual reports and hence stakeholder theory was used in this study to answer the question regarding what determines that motivates companies to disclose social information. Some benefits were mentioned in the accounting literature for companies disclosing CSR information in developed countries; however, the benefits of CSRD in developing countries are still ignored and ambiguous due to a few of the studies in the accounting literature related to answer the previous question. Interviewees clarified different causes as shown in Table 2.

Most interviewees mentioned that there are two types of benefits for disclosing CSR information in annual reports. The main benefits include an increase in the company profitability, the extent of management attention for disclosing of CSR information, enhancing the company image, helping the management to make decisions, informing stakeholders about the company's contribution to community service and transparency. Thirteen of interviewees believe that providing positive CSR information in annual reports helps a company to support its financial performance. In this vein that twelve stated that the financial support has obtained by encouraging and attracting some stakeholders such as investors and consumers. In addition, twelve see that the growth of social and environmental awareness of the Libyan management has given more attention for disclosing of CSR information in annual reports, because such practices helps Libyan companies to make appropriate decisions. Six of interviewees see that the competition is an involved factor in improving a company performance, whilst only one says that the disclosure of social and environmental information has led to increase productivity.

Table 2: Perception of Interviewees on Causes and benefits for Disclosing CSR information

Number of Interview	The Percents of Interviews	Causes and Benefits of Discloser
Improving Financial Performance:
13 out of 31	42%	Encourage and attract investors and customers
12 out of 31	39%	Supporting the organisation profit
12 out of 31	39%	Making-decision
6 out of 31	19%	Competition
1 out of 31	3%	Improving productivity
Regulation and Management:
3 out of 31	10%	Requirements of stock market
3 out of 31	10%	International Accounting Standards
5 out of 31	16%	Environmental law
3 out of 31	10%	Management
19 out of 31	61%	Enhancement / creation of the company's image/reputation
16 out of 31	52%	Informing their stakeholders about the company's contribution to community service
14 out of 31	45%	Transparency
2 out of 31	6%	Improving employee commitment

Table 2 shows the perception of financial managers and information managers about the benefits that motivate the company to disclose CSR information in its annual reports. This is also evident in the following comment:

This company does not prepare annual reports for nothing; it has some reasons and benefits for emerging social activities.

Furthermore, sixteen mentioned that Libyan companies use CSR information for informing their stakeholders about the company's contribution to community service. Moreover, fourteen of the interviewees believe that transparency is considered as one of the most important motivations types that have led to the disclosure of social and environmental information, and it is also one of the most advantages of the top management. More specific, Armitage and Marston (2008) revealed that transparency in emerging CSR information may lead to: promoting integrity within the company and in its dealings with stakeholders; promoting confidence on the part of shareholders and other stakeholders; being part of what is expected of a good corporate citizen; helping non-executive directors to understand the business. Aribi, Z. A. (2009, p. 180) indicated that 'disclosing social responsibility information for the reason of transparency might be considered as a form of motivation for the top management to reveal such information'. Momin (2006) also revealed that companies in Bangladesh have a social obligation, and 'CSR practices are driven by the altruistic motivation of discharging such obligation by providing information to society, accepting that stakeholders have the right to know about the corporation in more detail'. In addition, he indicates that the increase of CSR of awareness has given encouragement to managers to use CSR information. Nineteen of interviewees that CSR practices could enhance/create the company reputation and the company image, and thus the company works to make strong communication with stakeholders, in particular its external stakeholders whom they think important for continuing their operation.

They think that creating or enhancing Reputation and profitability regardless long term or short term are often made by public relation exercises, and are essentially paying attention with investors and consumers. Thus, the effect of CSR on society has been referred to as tactics that possibly enable the companies to affect this perception (Deegan 2002). Two theses of Momin (2006) and Aribi, Z.A.(2009) also appears that emerging CSR activities in annual reports allow the company to enhance its reputation and its image through focus on its stakeholders or a marketing attention-grabber that is aimed at attracting consumers and investors and this has given benefits in long term and short term. Graham et al. (2005) that the main motivation for disclosure is a reputation enhancement for transparency. In the same way, Eccles and Mavrinac (1995) stated that the main benefit of disclosure improvement is increased management credibility in enhancing disclosure of quality. Lundholm & Van Winkle (2006) emphasize on the importance of obtaining shareholder confidence to achieve the purpose of disclosure that lead to increasing the share price through reducing scepticism about the company's future. The following comments by financial managers support the perceptions in table 2:

We believe that the company focuses on achieving some goals more than others, when it discloses information about social activities conducted in their annual reports. For example, the company focuses on enhancing the company's image, improving its financial performance and transparency, ...making the right decision... publicizing the company and its activities to all stakeholders....through conveying what has been done during the year to stakeholders such as owners, shareholders, investors and other... and the benefits are greater if the management of the company is convinced of the importance of disclosure of this information.

The secondary benefits that help the management to achieve some objectives are regulation and improving employee commitment. In this regard, Momin (2006) indicates that companies that are not responsive will not be able to survive and therefore companies will comply with regulations and standards. Three of the interviewees stated that Libyan companies which are listed in the Libyan stock market obligates disclosing for CSR information through the requirements of the stock market, while another three said that a company uses international Accounting standards which are considered as one of the main reasons for disclosing CSR information in its annual reports. Five confirmed that applied the environmental laws in a manufacturing company helps in disclosing CSR information. Regarding employee commitment, two see that disclosing CSR information might be considered as one of the forms of benefits for the management to reveal such information. The following comments by financial managers support the perceptions in table 2:

In fact, we believe that the dissemination of this information in the annual report will have a role in supporting the commitment of the employee and, also takes into account the application of law, but the commitment of employees is not non-core with most companies.

On the other hand, interviewees who are working in the manufacturing companies which are listed on the stock market believe that the company is committed to preparing annual reports according to regulations, in particular environmental laws and the requirements of the stock market because if the company did not apply these laws, this will be costly. Therefore, applying these laws can be effective as the most important factor for disclosing CSR information. Some financial managers stated in the following quotation:

Industrial companies such as steel and cement industry specifically committed to the application of laws that are interested in social activities in general and in particular environmental activities , hence it tries to show in the annual reports to avoid negative effects on the share price and reduce the profitability of the investor in the company.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

The purpose of this paper is to explain the importance and the benefits of CSRD in the annual reports of the Libyan context, as perceived by financial managers and information managers of the four sectors (manufacturing sector, banks and insurance sector, the services sector and mining sector), using a theoretical framework which combines stakeholder theory. This framework shows that an importance of CSR disclosure related to four categories (environmental activities, consumer activities, community activities and employee activities) to stakeholders. The focus on this topic is motivated by the emphasis in the prior accounting literature review on the reasons for disclosing CSR information as a primary motivation by which disclosure policy can influence the company performance. Managers and employees increasingly require considering SRD as a signal of improved CSR conduct in those fields because disclosure affects the business performance such as a company's reputation. CSR disclosure also leads to important results in the creation or deletion of other fundamentally intangible resources, and may help build a positive image with employees and managers. By demonstrating that a company does emerge CSR activities for their enhancing organisational performance, whereas non-emerging CSR can destroy organisational performance for a company, hence stakeholders require their companies to disclose CSR activities in their annual reports.

Furthermore, this paper presents some details about the effects of some factors on CSR in the Libyan environment context. Social, cultural, political, economic and legal factors are considered as the one of the most main effective factors in the business performance and accounting through CSR. This paper provides evidence from these managers about the importance and the benefits of CSR information for the company. The most important results are consistent with prior accounting research conducted in both developed and developing countries. Our experience with CSR in Libya suggests that CSR are often unimportant at being unable to prove the worth of CSR information. The results of this paper should help address concerns often expressed by stakeholders about the importance of dissemination CSR information in the annual reports. In particular, the results of this paper should be of value to managers concerned with the company performance on the whole. The companies can reap the major benefits from disclosing CSR information such as improving its financial performance through attracting some investors and consumers, improving its competition in the Libyan market, supporting the company profit, making-decision and improving productivity. They are also able to obtain tangible benefits such as enhancing the company of image/ reputation, improving the company of employee commitment. The results explains some reasons for disclosing CSR information in the annual reports such as requirements of the stock market, applying international accounting standards, environmental laws, the growth of social and environmental awareness of the Libyan management and transparency.

REFERENCES

Abdulhamid, MA, Ritchie, R, Lovatt, CJ & Pratten, JD 2005, 'The social role of accounting: views and perceptions of the accounting community in Libya towards corporate social responsibility and accountability', UK, Ahmad, NSM 2004, 'Corporate Environmental Disclosure in Libya: Evidence and Environmental Determinism Theory', Napier University, UK.

Ali, A 1996, 'Organisational development in the Arab World', Journal of Management Development, vol. 15, no. 5, pp. 4 - 21.

Aribi, ZA 2009, 'An Empirical study of corporate social responsibility and its disclosure in Islamic financial institutions', Edinburgh Napier University.

---- 2009, 'An Empirical study of corporate social responsibility and its disclosure in Islamic financial institutions', Edinburgh Napier University, UK.

- Armitage, S & Marston, C 2008, 'Corporate disclosure, cost of capital and reputation: evidence from finance directors', The British Accounting Review, vol. 40, no. 4, pp. 314-36
- Burke, L & Logsdon, JM 1996, 'How corporate social responsibility pays off', Long Range Planning, vol. 29, no. 4, pp. 495-502
- David, V 2005, Market for virtue: the potential and limits of corporate social responsibility, Brookings Institution Press, Washington DC.
- Deegan, C 2002, 'The legitimising effect of social and environmental disclosures—a theoretical foundation', Accounting, Auditing & Accountability Journal, vol. 15, no. 3, pp. 282-311
- Denzin, NK & Lincoln, YS 2000, 'The discipline and practice of qualitative research', Handbook of qualitative research, vol. 2, pp. 1-28
- Eccles, RG & Mavrinac, SC 1995, 'Improving the corporate disclosure process', Sloan Management Review, vol. 36, no. 4, pp. 11-25
- Ghazali, NAM 2007, 'Ownership structure and corporate social responsibility disclosure: some Malaysian evidence', Corporate Governance, vol. 7, no. 3, pp. 251-66
- Graham, JR, Harvey, CR & Rajgopal, S 2005, 'The economic implications of corporate financial reporting', Journal of Accounting and Economics, vol. 40, no. 1-3, pp. 3-73
- Gray, R 2001, 'Thirty years of social accounting, reporting and auditing: what(if anything) have we learnt?', Business Ethics A European Review, vol. 10, no. 1, pp. 9-15
- Gray, R, Kouhy, R & Lavers, S 1995, 'Corporate social and environmental reporting', Accounting, Auditing & Accountability Journal, vol. 8, no. 2, pp. 47-77
- Gray, R, Dey, C, Owen, D, Evans, R & Zadek, S 1997, 'Struggling with the praxis of social accounting', Accounting, Auditing and Accountability Journal, vol. 10, no. 3, pp. 325-64
- Jenkins, H & Yakovleva, N 2006, 'Corporate social responsibility in the mining industry: Exploring trends in social and environmental disclosure', Journal of Cleaner Production, vol. 14, no. 3-4, pp. 271-84
- Lundholm, R & Van Winkle, M 2006, 'Motives for disclosure and non-disclosure: a framework and review of the evidence', Accounting and Business Research, vol. 36, no. 1, p. 43
- Mateos, ES 2005, 'Libya's Return to the International Scene', Mediterranean Politics, vol. 10, no. 3, pp. 439-45
- Mathews, MR 1997, 'Twenty-five years of social and environmental accounting research', Accounting, Auditing & Accountability Journal, vol. 10, no. 4, pp. 481-531

Momin, MA 2006, 'Corporate social responsibility and reporting by multinational corporations in Bangladesh: an exploration', University of Glasgow, UK.

O'Rourke, D 2004, 'Opportunities and obstacles for corporate social responsibility reporting in developing countries', The World Bank Group & Corporate Social Responsibility Practice Mar, vol. 27, pp. 39-40

Pratten, JD & Mashat, AA 2009, 'Corporate social disclosure in Libya', Social Responsibility Journal, vol. 5, no. 3, pp. 311-27

WBCSD 1998, World business council for sustainable development: Corporate social responsibility, WBCSD publications, Geneva.